No. CR 11-777 PJH (DMR)

Plaintiff,

ORDER RE PARTIES' JOINT DISCOVERY LETTER [DOCKET NO. 20]

v.

DARRELL ARMSTRONG,

Defendant.

Before the court is the parties' joint discovery letter of September 21, 2012. [Docket No. 20.] The parties' disputes focus on the information Defendant may obtain about the confidential government informant who would serve as the lead witness against Defendant in the case. The court held a discovery hearing on September 26, 2012. This order memorializes the rulings made at the hearing.

Background

On October 20, 2011 the government filed an indictment against Defendant, charging him with a violation of 21 U.S.C. §§ 841(a)(1) and 860, for knowingly or intentionally possessing and possessing with intent to distribute a controlled substance within 1000 feet of a school. [Docket No. 1.] During the discovery hearing, the parties agreed that a confidential informant ("the CI"), was instructed by agents to seek out individuals selling narcotics as a part of a federal law enforcement effort entitled Operation Safe Schools. The CI allegedly purchased $40 of crack cocaine base from Defendant in August 2011. The government conceded that the testimony of the CI will be central to its case, as the CI is the sole percipient witness to the single alleged criminal transaction. Because of the CI's centrality to the case, Defendant moves the court to compel the government to provide discovery about the CI. The court addresses Defendant's requests in turn.

1. The Informant's Identifying Information

Defendant asks the court to compel the government to turn over the present location, current address, phone number, and Social Security Number of the CI so that Defendant may begin investigating the CI's reputation for truthfulness in the community and other factors that may shed light upon the CI's credibility. The government opposes divulging most of this information at this time. However, it offers to provide Defendant with the CI's name and to make the CI available for an interview with defense counsel if the CI agrees to participate, and with the presence of a government agent.

The Ninth Circuit has recognized that in cases where an informant is a principal witness, such as in this matter, the government must provide the defense with the informant's identity; the only question is a matter of when. See United States v. Hernandez, 608 F.2d 741, 744-45 (9th Cir. 1979) (citing Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 77 (1957)) (quotation marks omitted). The Court also has recognized that "the address of a principal witness," such as the CI, "is an integral element of identity for without such information, little meaningful inquiry can be made into background information affecting credibility." Id. at 745 (citing Smith v. Illinois, 390 U.S. 129, 131 (1968); Alford v. United States, 282 U.S. 687, 693 (1931)); see Smith, 390 U.S. at 131 ("[W]hen the credibility of a witness is in issue, the very starting point in exposing falsehood and bringing out the truth through cross-examination must necessarily be to ask the witness who he is and where he lives. . . . To forbid this most rudimentary inquiry at the threshold is effectively to emasculate the right of cross-examination itself.") (footnote omitted) (quotation marks omitted).

The government may justify the non-disclosure of an informant's identity and address before trial where the government or informant demonstrates that disclosure "might subject the witness to harassment, humiliation, or danger." Hernandez, 608 F.2d at 745 (citing United States v. Harris, 501 F.2d 1, 9 (9th Cir. 1974)); accord United States v. Abonce-Barrera, 257 F.3d 959, 969 (9th Cir. 2001). The court must balance "the extent to which pre-trial disclosure would be helpful to the defendant and the government's interest in protecting the informant." Abonce-Barerra, 257 F.3d at 969 (citing United States v. Spires, 3 F.3d 1234, 1238 (9th Cir. 1993)); accord United States v. Anderson, 509 F.2d 724, 728 (9th Cir. 1975) (citing Roviaro, 353 U.S. at 58-62).

During the discovery hearing, the government conceded that the CI is not fearful of any harassment, humiliation or danger. The government and CI's primary concerns are that release of the identifying information may render the CI less useful and effective to law enforcement in the future, and would thus also impede the CI's employment prospects as a confidential informant. While the court recognizes these concerns, they do not counsel against releasing the information prior to trial, and may be mitigated through an appropriate protective order. The court therefore orders the government to immediately provide the CI's name and birth date. This information shall be provided pursuant to a protective order ("the Protective Order"), which grants access solely to the defense team (and not Defendant), mandates that the information be kept confidential, prohibits use of the information outside of this case, and requires the defense team to take reasonable steps in conducting the investigation to protect the CI's identity as a CI.¹ The court further orders that the government shall produce the CI's then-current address and personal telephone number to defense counsel two weeks prior to trial, and subject to the Protective Order.

2. Other Information Relevant to the Informant's Credibility and Motivation

At the hearing, the government represented that in the past two years, the CI has participated in other buy/walk operations as part of Operation Safe Schools, as well as in similar investigations ("investigatory purchases"). In addition, during the same time period, the CI purchased drugs on numerous occasions in order to obtain samples for government testing (non-investigatory purchases). Defendant argues that he is entitled to information about the CI's work for law enforcement which may illuminate the CI's credibility and motivations. For example, Defendant argues that the number of times the CI has participated in undercover "buy" operations goes to the CI's ability to recall the specifics of this particular sale more than one year after the fact. Defendant also argues that information regarding the frequency of the CI's participation, as well as the remuneration, may shed light on the CI's motivation for testifying against Defendant.

Defendant's requests include the number of times and specific dates that the Informant participated in buy/walk operations as a part of the Operations Safe Schools initiative; a list of all cases in which the CI has participated and testified in federal and state court; information about monetary expenses, immunity or sentencing promises, or other forms of intervention that the government may have provided the CI in return for cooperation;² and details on any occasions when the government discovered that the CI had acted untruthfully or dishonestly, including during crossexamination or when the government decided not to issue warrants based upon the CI's statements. Defendant also requests copies of any presentence and probation reports; details about any prior bad acts, including arrest and conviction records; and any polygraph records the CI may have. The government objects to releasing materials concerning the CI's prior work as a confidential informant as irrelevant, overbroad and burdensome, but agrees to produce information relating to the present case. The government also offers to provide information about any known past instances of the CI's dishonesty or unreliability, as well as the CI's arrest and criminal records, but declines to produce presentence or probation reports, polygraph results, or information on "bad acts" that go beyond what it has already agreed to produce.

Due process requires that the government in any prosecution turn over to the defense all "evidence favorable to an accused . . . where the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment." Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 281 (1999) (citing United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 107 (1976); Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87(1963)). This duty "encompasses impeachment evidence as well as exculpatory evidence." Id. (citing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 676 (1985)). "[E]vidence bearing on the credibility of government witnesses" constitutes material evidence for this purpose and, therefore, is subject to disclosure. Carriger v. Stewart, 132 F.3d 463, 479 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing Bagley, 473 U.S. at 676; Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154-55 (1972)).

The information requested by Defendant generally bears on the CI's credibility and motivation. However, some of the requests are overbroad or burdensome as stated. Thus, the court

During the hearing, the government represented that the CI only receives monetary compensation. For that reason, Defendant withdrew his request for information regarding other forms of consideration, without prejudice to renewing it should facts come to light indicating that the CI benefitted in other ways.

finds that the following items are appropriate tailored to the needs of the case, and orders the government to immediately produce the following, all subject to the Protective Order:

- The number of times the government used the CI in buy/walk operations in Operation Safe Schools in 2011 and 2012, and the dates of those operations;
- The number of times and the dates on which the CI was involved in other federal investigatory purchases from June 2011 until trial;
- An estimate of the number of federal non-investigatory purchases the CI made from June 2011 until trial;
- Testimony given by the CI in federal cases, along with the names of those cases;
- Any polygraph results;
 - The monetary compensation that the CI has received for work with the federal government in 2011 and 2012; and
 - The CI's record of criminal arrests and convictions. record.

3. The Informant's Statements Related to This Case

Defendant requested that the government produce all of the government witness statements prior to trial. Although both parties recognize that pursuant to the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500, such statements are not discoverable until the witness has testified under direct examination, the parties also acknowledged that the practice in this district often results in prior production as a matter of efficiency in case management. Both parties agreed to accede to the trial judge's preference in this matter. Judge Hamilton requests that the government produce its Jencks materials no later than three weeks before the commencement of trial.
